

The climbers hired a caravan of motorcycles in the northern town of Putao to transport their gear and supplies across Kachin state. They rode for three days before the wet and muddy route became passable only on foot.

At the Kachalka outdoor gym in Kiev, a former Soviet gymnast shows he's still limber at 83. The makeshift fitness area—several acres of salvaged metal, rubber, and wood in the restive capital—has been free to use since it opened in the 1970s.

Wearing masks of silica mud at the Blue Lagoon Spa, playful Japanese pensioners pretend to be zombies. These warm geothermal waters—100°F to 102°F and rich in minerals—are said to soothe psoriasis and other skin afflictions of the living.

With most homes lacking lights, front doors stay open to let in the sunshine. Onelia, 93, believes turning strangers into friends is a Cuban custom, and thus anyone passing by Onelia's door is her potential friend. „As I was the first foreigner to enter her house,” Wagenstein says, „she mentioned that it would be so nice if others would come to visit her too.”

January, a Hadza hunter, tracks a giraffe shot with a poisoned arrow in the Gideru mountains.

A novice shaman makes an offering of milk to the spirits at her initiation outside the Mongolian capital of Ulaanbaatar.
